OPPOSER/PETITIONER’S NOTICE OF RELIANCE ON PRINTED PUBLICATIONS

Pursuant to Rule 2.122(e) of the Trademark Rules of Practice, Opposer/Petitioner Dr Pepper/Seven Up, Inc. hereby makes of record and notifies Applicant/Registrant (“Applicant”) of its reliance on the following printed publications:

(a) Crossword Puzzle from The New York Times at C2, August 18, 2009, a true and correct copy of which is attached hereto as Opposer’s Exhibit PX223, for which clue 59 Across is “Popular Fanta-like soda”; and

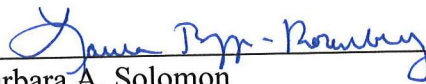

(b) “Answer to Previous [Crossword] Puzzle,” The New York Times at C2, August 19, 2009, a true and correct copy of which is attached hereto as Opposer’s Exhibit PX224, indicating that the answer to clue 59 Across from August 18, 2009’s crossword puzzle is “ORANGE CRUSH.”

The attached printed publications are relevant to the fame of the CRUSH mark, as they indicate a reference to and knowledge of the mark in popular culture. These printed publications serve to rebut the testimony and evidence submitted by Applicant suggesting that CRUSH soda and the CRUSH brand is not a well-known, widely-known or popular beverage.

Arts Chief to See What Plays in Peoria

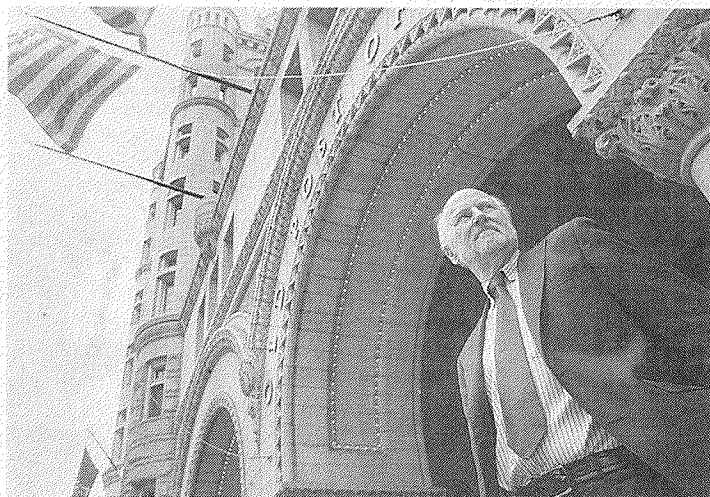

By ROBIN POGREBIN

Rocco Landesman, who was confirmed this month as the new chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, has accepted an invitation to visit Peoria, Ill., an offer proffered in response to public comments he made about the city.

In an article published in The New York Times on Aug. 8, Mr. Landesman talked about his inclination to support art on the basis of quality, not geography, in implied contrast to his predecessor's policy of directing agency funds to every Congressional district. "I don't know if there's a theater in Peoria, but I would bet that it's not as good as Steppenwolf or the Goodman," Mr. Landesman said in the article, making reference to two acclaimed Chicago theater companies. "There is going to be some push back from me about democratizing arts grants to the point where you really have to answer some questions about artistic merit."

After reading this, Suzette Boulais, the executive director of ArtsPartners of Central Illinois, an advocacy group, sent an e-mail message to Mr. Landesman inviting him to visit her area. "I thought, 'Let's give him an opportunity to see some of our stellar theater,'" Ms. Boulais said in a telephone interview on Monday. "We wanted to be proactive but with a good spirit and allow him a chance to meet with us."

Similarly, Kathy Chitwood, executive director of the Eastlight Theater in East Peoria, invited Mr. Landesman to see her theater's production of "Rent," which closed on Saturday. Although Mr. Landesman missed that opportunity, Ms. Chitwood said she looked forward to his future visit and that representatives from the Goodman and Steppenwolf were also expected to attend. "We're paying homage to the 'beer summit' by calling this the 'lemonade stand,' Ms. Chitwood said in an interview Monday, referring to President Obama's recent informal peacemaking session at the White House.

"We're smaller — we get that — we know our place in the food chain of the arts," Ms. Chitwood added. "But we really have a place too, and our work is worthy."

Mr. Landesman, who is from St. Louis, said on Monday that he looked forward to the trip, which he planned to make sometime in early December, when the Eastlight presents its holiday show, and that he was surprised by the positive spirit with which the invitation was extended. "The attitude could have been indignation, hostility, being offended — it was anything but," he said. "I think it's something we're all going to have good fun with. It's great for the Peoria folks — having some attention. And we can make a statement about the N.E.A. — we do intend to be everywhere. I'm looking forward to it."

"I heard they have a Steak 'n Shake there," Mr. Landesman added, "which is my favorite place to eat."

Mr. Landesman was also pleased to hear that the Eastlight's first production in 1992 was "Big River," a show he originated as a producer on Broadway. "I love that show and I love anyone who loves it," he said.

Mr. Landesman's Peoria remark, made around the time of his confirmation, generated considerable controversy among cultural groups, journalists and bloggers, as did some of his other comments in the article. The Bloomberg News writer Jeremy Gerard, for example, called Mr. Landesman's argument that the arts are valuable for their contributions to the economy "tired and dubious."

But Mr. Landesman said he had no regrets. "I felt I had the podium for about one day," he said. "I very much wanted to come out strong and say, 'The days of the cowering N.E.A. are over.'"

Revelation in Memoir By William Golding

In his novel "Lord of the Flies," William Golding vividly reminded readers of the primal nature of man lurking beneath his civilized exterior. Golding, who won the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1983, was apparently no stranger to the dark side. In an unpublished memoir composed for his wife, Golding, below, who died in 1993, wrote that he tried to rape a 15-year-old girl when he was a young man, The Times of London reported. Golding's account of the incident was discovered by John Carey, chief book reviewer of The Sunday Times of London and an emeritus professor of English literature at Oxford University, who has written a forthcoming biography, "William Golding: The Man Who Wrote 'Lord of the Flies,'" and had access to Golding's archives. In the unpublished memoir, called "Men, Women & Now," Golding wrote that he had tried to rape a friend after returning home at 18 from his first year at Oxford. Golding also wrote that as a schoolteacher he pitted his pupils against one another in "Lord of the Flies"-like experiments to see what happened when he gave them more freedom. "Lord of the Flies," about a group of schoolboys who revert to savagery when stranded on a deserted island, was published in 1954.
